

East Shore Unitarian Homeschool Cooperative

Principle Led Education

• Welcome

Hello!

Goodbye. Goodbye. Goodbye.

East Shore Unitarian Homeschool Cooperative (EUHC) is closed. If you are a liberal-minded homeschooling family, we now are able to suggest Labyrinth Homeschool Cooperative in Sammamish, Washington, who we are told no longer has any type of Christian bias, spoken or otherwise!

EUHC had a wonderful year and it was so great that all of the leadership got very busy. Now that liberal and UU homeschooling can get such needs met elsewhere, it is time to move on. And a good thing because the leadership got very busy!

Walter Andrews had an international book tour and university students to teach. Nicole Laurent decided that her psychotherapy practice in Issaquah was needed full-time and her partner Lawton Watkins took on more homeschooling responsibilities and continues to work full-time as a software engineer. Kristen Feuerstein opened a business of her own that provides instruction in how to be truly fabulous, and Pam Kaser continues her spiritual journey as a homeschooler and our own beautiful mystic.

Should EUHC ever be resurrected it will be at a time when it is needed again. In the meantime, we encourage everyone to move forward on their journeys and take with them what they learned in our time together. If you haven't visited East Shore Unitarian Church yet, you simply must because there is no more beautiful church or group of individuals around. And remember...

Never pretend to be something you are not to fit in at any homeschooling community... EVER!

As of Summer 2008,
East Shore Unitarian
